Just another Nobel Prize

Yeah, right! 2 professors from the University of Chicago share prestigious honor

Chicago Tribune

Go looking for an economist at the University of Chicago and you have surprisingly decent odds of running into a Nobel Prize winner.

The Hyde Park university added to its amazing legacy Monday when two of its scholars shared in the Nobel Prize in economics. Eugene Fama and Lars Peter Hansen were rewarded for developing methods to spot trends in the prices of stock, bonds, homes and other assets.

Along with a third winner, Robert Shiller of Yale University, they will share in the $1.23 million prize.

Their work has had a profound effect on academic research and changed the field of finance. The emergence of low-fee, index mutual funds that are part of every retirement plan is one prominent example.

"Modern finance is very much about the empirical study of asset markets, due in large part to the work of these laureates," said John Campbell, a Harvard University economics professor. "For me, personally, these are three men whose work I've been studying, working with and grappling with my entire professional life."

For a few hours Monday, the serious atmosphere on the University of Chicago campus was replaced with joy and excitement, as the university feted its latest laureates. A boisterous, standing-room-only crowd of students and faculty greeted Fama and Hansen as they met the news media in the sunlit atrium at the U. of C. Booth School of Business.

Gary Becker, 82, who was awarded the economics prize in 1992, sat in the front row. He fondly remembers being treated as a celebrity after he won.

"You're treated like you're royalty, and for the rest of the year you'll have all the doors open for you," he said. "Everybody wants you to speak. It's a remarkable period of time. I recommend it to everybody."

Fama, 74, and Hansen, 60, both credited the university for building a roster of distinguished faculty in the economics department. The faculty promotes an intellectually rigorous yet collegial culture, they said.

"I've said this many times before, but whatever I am owes at least two-thirds of it, maybe three-quarters, maybe 90 percent to the University of Chicago," Fama said at a morning news conference. "The interaction you get from your colleagues is so influential in building your work that you cannot underestimate its impact."

Hansen thanked the many role models and co-workers in the economics department that have molded his work. "For them, economics was supposed to do something. It was supposed to explain the world, and it was supposed to be critical," he said.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO'S NOBELS

University of Chicago professors Eugene Fama and Lars Peter Hansen, along with Yale professor Robert Shiller, won the 2013 Nobel Prize in economics Monday for research that helps explain "how and why the prices of stocks and bonds change over time," according to the U. of C. Fama and Hansen are the 27th and 28th people associated with the university to win the Nobel Prize in economics. Overall, 89 people with ties to the university have won a Nobel Prize.

CTA win-loss record

GOING PUBLIC

Tracy Swartz

 @tswartz
 @tribune.com
 @tracyswartz

As the CTA continues its plan to convert riders to the new Ventra fare collection system, the agency is winding down on another project: the reconstruction of the southern portion of the Red Line.

Trains are expected to begin running along the Red Line between 95th Street and Roosevelt Road starting 2 a.m. Sunday. This section of the Red Line has been out of commission since May 19 as crews ripped up the tracks, laid new ones and made three stations accessible for riders with disabilities.

When details of the project were announced last year, some South Siders voiced concerns at hearings about safety of the reroutes and slow buses.

But the CTA stuck to its intricate plan of Red Line trains running on Green Line tracks, local and express shuttle buses and converting the Garfield Green Line station in Washington Park into a transfer hub.

And many riders stuck with the CTA. Some reported that the shuttle buses were faster than the Red Line. Partway into the project, the CTA said it retained 90 percent of its ridership affected by the reconstruction.

When the southern line opens next week, trains are supposed to run at least 10 minutes faster than before, thanks to the elimination of slow zones.

The transition to Ventra, on the other hand, hasn't gone as smoothly. Some riders with Chicago Cards complained to Going Public that they still haven't received their Ventra cards, despite having verified their mailing addresses months ago.

The CTA said the last batch of Chicago Card transition mailings went out Oct. 3. Since it's supposed to take seven to 10 business days for the cards to arrive, riders should receive their cards this week.

Meanwhile, the CTA said 37 percent of its rides have been paid for by Ventra, as of Sunday. There are 1.07 million Ventra accounts while 506,000 cards have been registered, according to the CTA.

The CTA last week reversed its decision to stop sales of disposable magnetic cards in rail stations and to prevent Chicago Card users from adding money to their cards in rail stations.

The agency said it changed course because of concerns with Ventra customer service. On Monday, GP waited 43 minutes for a rep after being disconnected once, an improvement from Oct. 7's six disconnections and 56-minute wait.

The CTA said it is sticking to its other deadlines: Nov. 14 is the last day to use Chicago Cards while Dec. 14 is the last day to use disposable cards.

This week: Logan Square Blue Line

It's not trains or buses in abundance at this Blue Line station. It's bikes. There are Divvy bikes outside the station and racks and racks of bikes inside the station. The Logan Square stop looks more like a bike store than a train station. The racks look so overloaded, though, it may be time to make even more bike parking since the need is quite obviously there. Next up: Western Brown Line

Want to save Snapchat pictures and videos without the sender finding out? There's an app for that.

SnapHack, a 99-cent app for Apple iOS devices, lets users save photos and videos that they receive via Snapchat, circumventing Snapchat's key feature that automatically deletes messages seconds after they've been read or seen.

"Save your snapchats to your camera roll without the sender knowing and view them as many times as you like!" the app's description reads.

The app works by having users sign into SnapHack using their Snapchat login information.

Any time users receive a notice of a new "snap," they simply have to open the SnapHack app and refresh the app to retrieve the new pictures and videos they have received. They can then open each snap individually and tell the app to save the file onto their device. The app won't save snaps if they have already been opened with the Snapchat app.

SnapHack launched this weekend, and it is not affiliated with Snapchat. When asked about the new app, Snapchat declined to comment.

While some users may appreciate the fact that SnapHack lets them quickly and easily save snaps, others may not be happy to hear that their snaps may be getting saved without their knowledge.

Snapchat is commonly used to send pictures and videos to friends. Because snaps usually disappear within a matter of seconds, many use the app to send silly or embarrassing pictures that they wouldn't normally post on other social networks. Others also use Snapchat to send lewd content.

CHICAGO IDEAS WEEK DELIVERS DEEP THOUGHTS... AND JOKES

RedEye

Hey, what's the bright idea?

Chicago Ideas Week kicked off Monday and runs through Sunday at locations throughout Chicago.

Touted as an annual gathering of global leaders, the event features speakers including columnist Dan Savage, chef Mario Batali and Mayor Emanuel discussing topics ranging from literature to science to politics. The CEO of Etsy is presenting at a tech summit. The assistant managing editor of Time magazine will weigh in on a panel looking at the meaning of cities. And an astronomer from the Adler Planetarium is scheduled to discuss the importance of visual arts in the study of space.

Organizers say the goal is to "stimulate new initiatives and ventures, create new connections and collaborations and establish a community of people who have the desire to achieve great things."

In the spirit of doing things differently, RedEye decided to turn the tables on our interview subjects, letting them conduct their own Q&A session. We asked Brian Babylon, Chicago comic and host of "The Morning AMP" radio show on Vocalo (89.5-FM), to get the scoop on Canadian writer and Twitter darling Kelly Oxford, author of "Everything is Perfect When You're a Liar."

Oxford and Babylon are participating in the "Comedy: It's Funny 'Cause It's True" talk at 7:30 p.m. Saturday. They'll be alongside Niecy Nash of "Reno 911" and Peter McGraw and Joel Warner, co-authors of "The Humor Code," a book trying to pin down the science of funny.

So what exactly is "Twitter famous" in your words?

I guess people who have a lot of followers on Twitter? I don't know. I can't think of anyone who has a lot of followers on Twitter who does nothing else in life, so if it isn't that, I don't know what it is.

How can one be funny in 140 characters?

If you've never made someone laugh in one or two sentences, I can't help you. If you have, you already know what to do.

Brian Babylon

PICKING YOUR BRAIN

Looking to check out Chicago Ideas Week? Here are some suggestions for four different personality types. c.a.

FOR FUNNY PEOPLE

Comedy: It's Funny 'Cause It's True

Saturday, 7:30-9 p.m.
Museum of Contemporary Art
(220 E. Chicago Ave.)

Comedian and radio host Brian Babylon chats with Niecy Nash, Kelly Oxford and the authors of "The Humor Code" in a 90-minute presentation about when comedy meets real life.

FOR GOOD-DOERS

Chicago Cares: Power-solving Chicago's Biggest Challenges Through Volunteerism

Thursday, noon-2 p.m.
Chicago Cares (2 N. Riverside Plaza, Suite 2200)

This hands-on lab allows attendees to develop a module that will address some of Chicago's most urgent issues. Event host Chicago Cares, a group that creates volunteer experiences throughout the city, plans to incorporate the best module into its future programs.

You are not your typical-looking "Internet" person.

Do you think that helped you?

I've been online causing trouble for longer than people have had profile photos. I think if I was a performer it would help, but I'm a writer. I don't have a head shot, and if I did it certainly wouldn't be on my scripts when I submit them, nor on my book proposals.

What are your thoughts on Canada hockey vs. the Chicago Blackhawks?

When I hear Chicago Blackhawks, I think of Chris Chelios. When I think of Chris Chelios, I think of how he now lives in Malibu with his "Malibu Mob" and chills with Tony Danza and Frasier and [surfer] Laird Hamilton. I once saw Laird twice in one week and that's the closest I'll ever get to a mermaid.

Do you think your funny tweets can be turned into TV or movies?

All movies and television series have loglines, and those are usually a sentence or two. So I guess a tweet could technically explain a series of movie concept, sure.

We all know the concept of Justin Halpern's feed about his dad became a CBS series ["$#! My Dad Says," 2010-11]

I can't imagine why anyone would turn my tweet into TV or movie when I can and do write entire scripts.

Can moving to Hollywood make one lose some of their edge?

It could definitely stop one from tweeting about snow.

INTERVIEW COMPILED BY REDEYE INTERN COURTNEY GRIFFIN

From firearm to fashion accessory

By Courtney Griffin | REDEYE

Business and social activism don't always go hand-in-hand. But for Peter Thum, entrepreneur and creator of Liberty United, that's the only business he knows.

Founded in 2012 by Thum and his wife, actress Cara Buono, Liberty United creates jewelry using illegal firearms that have been removed from circulation in the U.S. Labeling their product as "Remade in the U.S.A.," Liberty United works with cities across the country to collect confiscated weaponry and create bracelets, necklaces and rings.

Thum, a graduate of the Kellogg School of Management at Northwestern University, is bringing his product to Chicago Ideas Week. Liberty United will be stationed in the lobby of the Cadillac Palace Theatre through Saturday. The company will donate 25 percent of proceeds to programs that work to reduce gun violence in the U.S., he said.

"A portion of the money goes back to the communities affected," said Thum, 45, who is based out of New York City.

If Thum's past ventures are any indication, then there are a couple of reasons to be hopeful for Liberty United's future. Thum's first business was a water bottle company that provided a month's worth of water to communities in need around the world. Thum named the company Ethos and sold the brand to Starbucks.

Thum also is the founder of Fonderie 47, a high-end jewelry company that uses recycled assault rifle parts from African countries to make its product. He was inspired to create the brand after a frightening run-in with Tanzanian child soldiers in 2008.

"We decided we needed to do something about this assault weapon problem," Thum said. Fonderie 47 has now destroyed and recycled more than 34,000 assault rifles in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Burundi. C.GRIFFIN@TRIBUNE.COM | @CIANEGRIFIN

Peanut lockdown

Are you ready for some allergy-free NU football?

Chicago Tribune

When the Northwestern Wildcats face off against the Minnesota Golden Gophers at Ryan Field in Evanston on Saturday, something will be missing: peanuts.

Northwestern University is hosting its first peanut-free football game to give fans with allergies a chance to focus on the game instead of worrying about negative reactions to the popular stadium snack, which can range from mild irritation to life-threatening anaphylactic shock.

That's a big draw for Joyce Mason's family, Northwestern fans from Gurnee. Mason's daughter Julie, 13, has a potentially life-threatening peanut allergy. Safeguards such as wiping down the seats and traveling with two EpiPens to counter severe reactions aren't always enough.

At a Chicago Cubs game a few years ago, Julie broke out in hives and began wheezing despite taking all of those precautions, Mason said, so now they attend only peanut-free games.

Several major and minor league baseball teams, including the White Sox, Cubs and Kane County Cougars, have banned peanuts in certain sections at select games, as have the Chicago Wolves hockey team.

But the Wildcats may be the first college team to host an allergy-friendly game, said Northwestern Athletic Department spokesman Dan Yopchick. The NCAA does not track which teams offer peanut-free events.

No peanut products will be sold or permitted inside Ryan Field on Saturday. They've already started powerwashing each of the stadium's nearly 50,000 seats to eliminate any peanut residue. However, fans with severe allergies should still take precautions,

DID YOU KNOW?

Peanut allergies affect about five out of every 1,000 Americans and are on the rise, said Raoul Wolf, chief of the pediatric allergy and immunology section at University of Chicago Medicine. Though closed environments like airplanes pose a greater danger, stadiums can be "a huge risk," Wolf said. "If you can smell the peanuts, there's enough protein in the air to cause a bad reaction. For the most sensitive patients, it's not a risk worth taking."

Yopchick said.

While some will miss a favorite game-day food, it will be a huge relief for fans with allergies, said Julie Campbell, president of the not-for-profit Illinois Food Allergy Education Association.

"When the whole game is peanut-free, you can relax and enjoy the game like everybody else," Campbell said.

Chicago, Absolut-ly

Chicago Tribune

Absolut says it has captured the essence of the Windy City in a bottle, but it doesn't taste like Italian beef or deep dish.

The vodka maker on Monday unveiled Absolut Chicago, with the essence of olive and rosemary. The limited edition vodka comes in a bottle splashed with a cityscape design.

Absolut Chicago is the seventh city-inspired flavor the company has introduced. The first was New Orleans (mango and black pepper) in 2007, followed by L.A., Boston, Brooklyn, San Francisco and Miami.

It's not clear how long the flavor will be available.

Lawmakers indicate funding deal is near

5 WASHINGTON A month of combat in Congress over government spending showed signs Monday of giving way to a Senate deal to reopen shuttered federal agencies and prevent an economically damaging default on federal debt.

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, a Democrat, and his Republican counterpart, Mitch McConnell, ended a day of constant talks with optimistic proclamations, as details leaked out of the pact they were negotiating.

"We've made tremendous progress," Reid said at the end of a Senate session during a federal holiday, underscoring the urgency of settling a fiscal crisis that was nearing a Thursday deadline. That's when the Treasury Department estimates it will reach a $16.7 trillion borrowing limit.

"We hope that with good fortune ... that perhaps tomorrow will be a bright day," Reid said, hinting at the possible Tuesday announcement of a bipartisan Senate deal.

McConnell, who has been a fierce critic of Reid all year instead had a smile on his face and upbeat words. "We've had a good day; had a good day yesterday," he said of his work with Reid.

The plan under discussion would promptly end a partial government shutdown about to enter its third week. It also would raise the debt ceiling by enough to cover the nation's borrowing needs at least through mid-February, according to a source familiar with the negotiations.

SURVEY SAYS

Republicans have taken a hit in opinion polls since the standoff began, and some in the party worry it could hurt their chances to win control of the Senate in next year's midterm elections. A Washington Post/ABC News poll released Monday found that 74 percent of Americans disapprove of the way congressional Republicans have handled the standoff, compared with a 53 percent disapproval rating for President Obama.

Government operations would be funded through the middle of January, keeping in place the across-the-board "sequester" spending cuts that took effect in March, though government agencies would have more latitude to ease their effects. It would also set up a new round of budget talks that would try to strike a bargain by year's end.

With the Reid-McConnell talks continuing, these details were subject to change, according to Senate aides.

Democrats look to have fended off any major changes to President Obama's health law, something that could fuel resistance, particularly by conservative Republicans in the House of Representatives who had insisted on delaying Obamacare as a condition of continued funding.

By Bryan Crawford | FOR REDEYE

Hall of Fame basketball writer Sam Smith probably has forgotten more about basketball than most people remember.

But when it came to Derrick Rose's knee injury and the backlash he took for sitting out the 2012-13 season, Smith saw something he hadn't witnessed in 30 years covering professional sports: fans turning on the hometown star of the hometown team. RedEye talked to the co-author of "The Jordan Rules" for his take on Rose's injury and the 2013-14 Bulls.

Talk about why you were upset by the backlash toward Rose.

I was shocked at the level of vitriol towards a popular and cooperative player. I'd never seen anything like that, questioning an injury. I've never seen a player's injury questioned to that level. It would be one thing if it was Rasheed Wallace, but Derrick Rose is a good guy. He's cooperative and friendly to everybody, and to challenge his character and his motives, I was personally getting upset. I thought the character assassination for this guy, of all guys, given the severity of the injury, it was just unprecedented.

A lot of the criticism of Rose came right here in Chicago. What did you make of that?

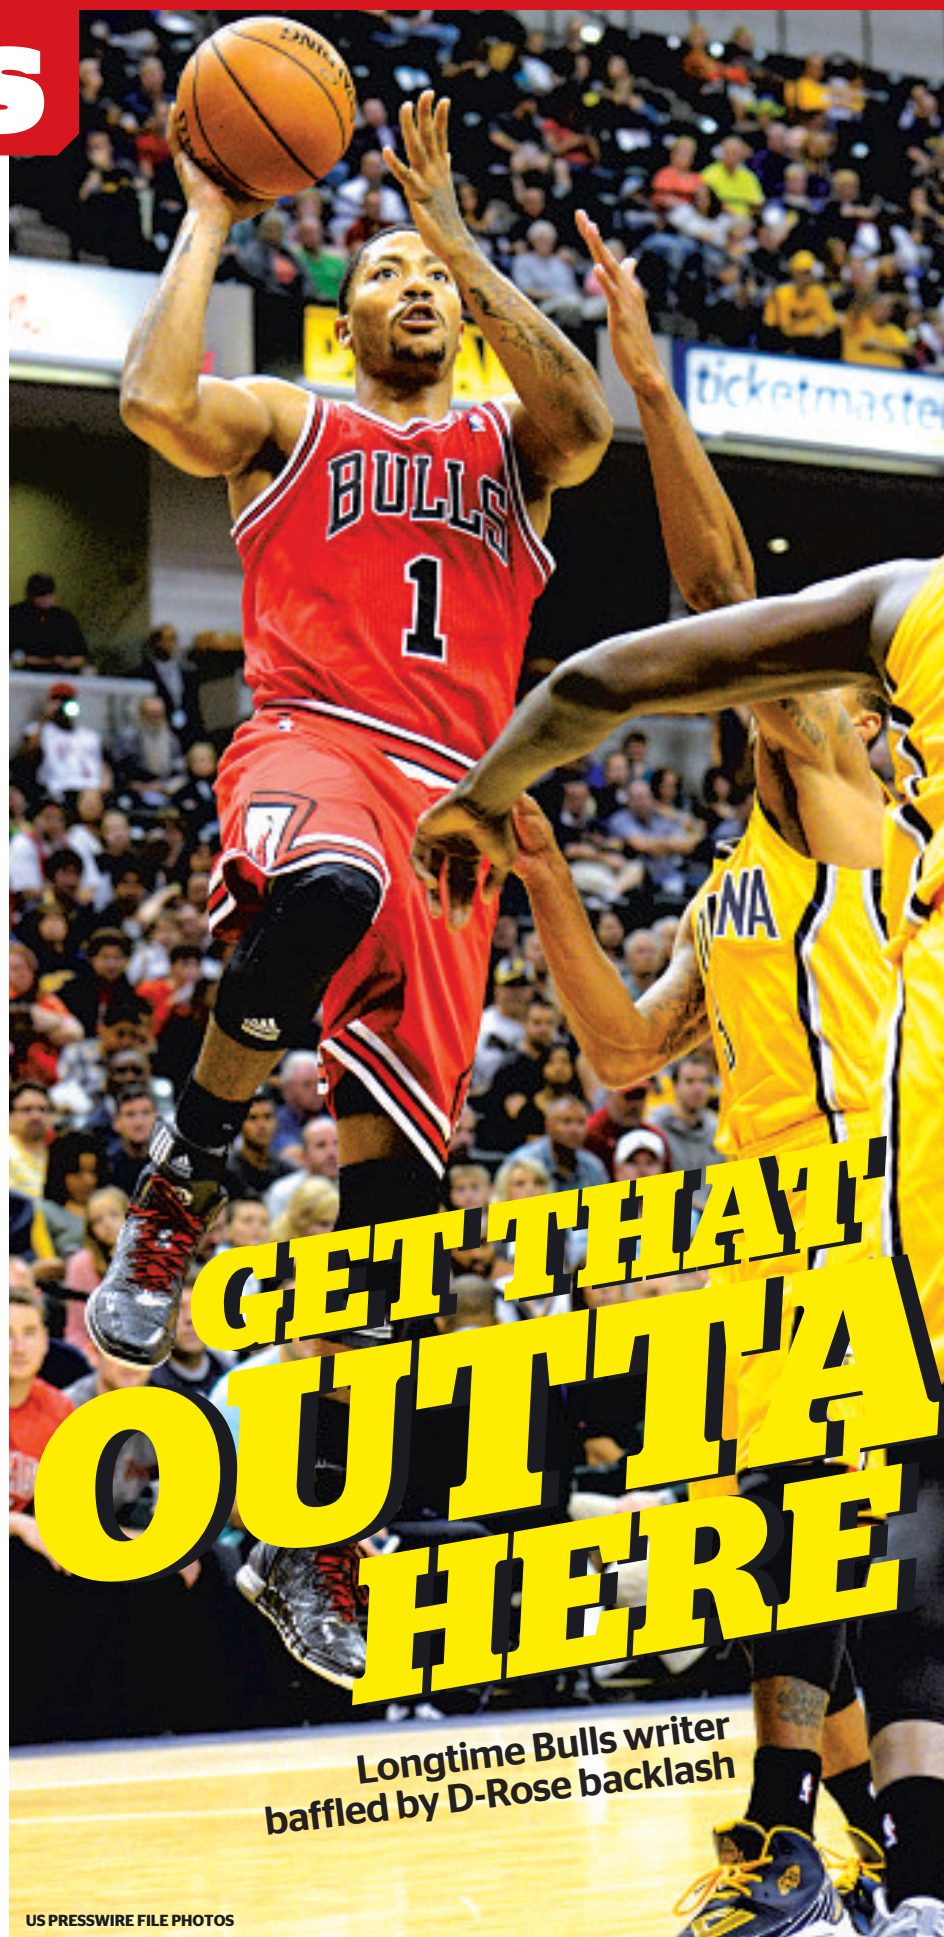

I felt like I became a defender of Derrick, not just because I write for the Bulls website, [but] because of how I felt about that. I was on a local radio show with an ex-football player and he was talking about how he had an ACL injury. This was a fat lineman who was 300 pounds and could barely move, and he was comparing himself to Derrick Rose. That's how ridiculous it got.

Most of the anger seemed to stem from people thinking he would come back last season. Did you think he would play last year?

I thought very early on, from the beginning of the season, that he wasn't going to play, and I thought it was the right thing.

Do you think the disconnect came from people not knowing the fundamental difference between being hurt and being injured?

Yes, way injured. This guy had a serious knee injury that required reconstructive surgery. What makes Derrick unique in many respects is, to me, I've never seen a player like him in the history of the NBA at the point guard position to play explosive like that. Here is one of the great gifts to sports, a point guard who plays like this. If he were to lose that, it would be terrible.

How much do you think Adrian Peterson's comeback from his ACL injury with the Minnesota Vikings influenced what people thought about Rose?

It's a different situation. First of all, he's a football player running around in armor and he's not jumping. The key to Derrick is his explosiveness and how he can do these things in the air. People tend to take the one exception—and Adrian Peterson was an exception because nobody had ever done that before—and think that everybody should be able to do it. That was really unfair to Derrick to compare him to the one guy who did something very unusual.

How do you think the Bulls will do this season?

I think they're very good, and I think they have a real chance to be in the Finals. But with that said, so do eight other teams. I think the league is really good and there's four legit championship teams in the East, four or five in the West, and you can be really good and not get there. But this is the best starting five since Tom Thibodeau has been here.

BRYAN CRAWFORD IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

THIBODEAU: ROSE IS A-OK

Bulls coach Tom Thibodeau did not look concerned after Derrick Rose sat out Saturday's preseason game in Brazil. "Derrick did everything [in practice Monday]," Thibodeau said. "He's fine." Whew!

Maickel Melamed
NANCY STONE/TRIBUNE

Last? Not even close

16 hours well worth it for one marathon finisher

Hours after organizers for the Bank of America Chicago Marathon tore down the time mats and the medical tents and reopened the streets, Maickel Melamed finally finished the race, the last of more than 40,000 people.

Melamed, a 38-year-old Venezuelan with a rare condition limiting his muscular strength, spent 16 hours and 46 minutes walking to the finish line, which he crossed after 1 a.m. Monday. The marathon's website shows he started at 8:20 a.m. Sunday.

Chicago Marathon spokesman Jeremy Borling said Melamed's finish time wasn't recorded.

"No timing mats were remaining on the course," Borling said. "But obviously you can't take away the effort."

Six and a half hours after the last person crosses the start line, a sweep vehicle runs Maickel Melamed (center) finished the marathon in 16 hours and 46 minutes, after 1 a.m. Monday.

the course to signal to marathon staff that it's time to start tearing down. The streets are swept and reopened.

"We advise participants that if they're not ahead of that vehicle to stay on the sidewalks," Borling said.

When Melamed crossed the finish line, he was greeted by a tearful welcoming party. One of the first things he did was hand the race medal to his father, one of the dozens of people gathered in celebration, according to Billy Russo, who coordinates publicity for Melamed.

"The message is, 'If you dream it, make it happen,'" Melamed told reporters. "Because your life is the most beautiful thing that could happen to you. So make the best of it."

Melamed has now run the New York, Berlin and Chicago marathons, and he hopes to tackle Tokyo and Boston, Russo said.

Chicago Fashion Week events

St. Frimpong
design

By Lauren Krause | FOR REDEYE

Fashion Focus: Chicago's Fashion Week kicks off this week with runway shows and other fashion and shopping events throughout the city. Although many official city-sponsored shows sold out immediately, there still are plenty of other great (and often free) affiliated events worth checking out.

NEXT FASHION CHICAGO 2013 Germania Place

108 W. Germania Place
312-573-1968

Catch the next wave of local fashion at this splashy runway show. Along with looks from designers such as St. Frimpong, Elena Bobysheva and Tamra Ellingson, the evening includes a design challenge featuring the work of 10 local fashion design students. The top three students selected will win fabrics and art supplies to help further their education. VIP tickets ($95) include a pre-show cocktail reception. 6-10:30 p.m. Thursday. $45; $15 for students. Tickets: nextfashionchicago.com. Use promo "catwalk" to save $10.

COMFORT CHIC CHICAGO TRUNK SHOW Comfort Me Boutique

5241 S. Harper
Ave. 773-363-4001

Sip on a glass of vino while browsing women's wear, handbags, jewelry and make-up from four local designers and artists at this Hyde Park trunk show, including Redefined and My Noma. Nosh on small bites while enjoying a complimentary eye makeup application; getting ready for a night out has never been easier. 7-10 p.m. Thursday. Free.

MODERN VINTAGE CHICAGO PREVIEW SHOPPING PARTY AND FASHION INSTALLATION

1340 W. Washington St.
312-666-1200

From the producers/geniuses of Randolph Street Market, Modern Vintage Chicago is a shopping event that focuses on vintage fashion, jewelry

Tamra
Ellingson
design

and accessories. This preview party includes early access to vendors, appetizers from Belly Q, cocktails and a DJ. Tickets benefit the Costume Council of the Chicago History Museum. 6-8 p.m. Friday. $30 at gate, $25 online and free parking. Tickets: modernvintagechicago.com.

FASHION FORWARD! The Fashion Market

560 W. Washington Blvd.
847-877-1823

The Fashion Market, a website for Chicago's emerging fashion scene, offers entertainment, runway shows and designs from 10 up-and-comers. You can also exercise a little retail therapy at the event's pop-up shop. 7-9 p.m. Saturday. Free. RSVP: thefashionmarket.com.

GREEN RIBBON GALA American Junkie

15 W. Illinois St. 913-515-3621

For the eco-chic, the Green Ribbon Foundation is hosting a night of sustainable fashion, entertainment and networking. The evening includes environmentally friendly businesses as well as drinks and snacks from organic restaurants.

Designers include Stix and Roses by Sararose Krenger, Allison Parris, H.E. Organics by Heather Murphy and Green Goddess Boutique. 7-10 p.m. Saturday. $32, $85 for VIP, which includes a reception at 6:30. Tickets: greenribbongala-efbevent.eventbrite.com.

FASHIONBAR CHICAGO PRESENTS LVW (LOVE, VISION, WOMEN) FASHION SHOW Chicago Scenic Studios

1315 N. North
Branch St. 312-274-9900

Step into this transformed warehouse for runway shows spotlighting three local women designers. Dance along with the DJ or imbibe on a cocktail while watching models strut their stuff. Proceeds benefit Family Rescue, a non-profit striving to end domestic violence in Chicago, and featured designers include Luz Maria Diaz, Vicky Zuniga-Winkler and Wanda Cobar. 6:30-10 p.m. Saturday. $30, $20 for students, $40 for VIP (includes first-row seating and swag bag). # The skinny on Ed

No doughnuts for this 'Mindy Project' star—sooner or later, the fat suit's coming off

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

■ cwagner@tribune.com
■ @showpatrol

Ed Weeks isn't fat like Dr. Jeremy Reed, his character on "The Mindy Project."

The formerly fit doctor has been stress-eating this season, the result of his running the practice at Shulman's Women's Health Associates when Dr. Mindy Lahiri (Mindy Kaling) took off for Haiti with her now-former beau. The sitcom airs at 8:30 p.m. Tuesdays on Fox.

"The gut actually is a onesie. It's a onesie fat suit," he told me during an Oct. 2 stop at RedEye. "It's very padded; it's very hot—not in a sexy way but in a warm way. And I've got a padded ass, which is pretty interesting, for the first time."

Last season, the caddish Jeremy used his British accent to easily talk Mindy out of her scrubs. He's a changed man now, unsure of himself and missing the good old days when all the women and half the guys in the office worshipped him.

"There's this veneer of this suave, cool guy, but there's this kind of fat teenage girl fighting to get out more," Weeks said. "The fat suit has really freed me up. ... It's nice to act without vanity."

Although Weeks has developed a taste for Goldfish (the crackers) and Cheez-Its, he doesn't shove sweets down his yapper quite like his character. He declined to take me on in a stress-eating race involving 50 Dunkin' Donuts Munchkins.

He's got to stay fit and handsome (my words, not his) because later in the season, he said, Jeremy will shed those extra pounds. The fat switch episode was originally supposed to happen in Episode 4, but the storyline worked so well that writer, co-star and Chicago native Ike Barinholtz delayed it for Episode 11 or so, Weeks said.

Ed Weeks
LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE

"[Jeremy] goes away to fat camp and comes back, according to the stage directions, skinny and handsome—their words, not mine," he said. "But now of course his problem is trying to keep on the wagon."

Weeks also teased more hijinks with Peter Prentice (Adam Pally), the new OB-GYN Jeremy hired who immediately gets on everyone's nerves, even Jeremy's. In the Oct. 22 episode we'll meet Jeremy's father (Alan Dale), who has a distant and mostly unpleasant relationship with his son.

"His dad gives him a lot of [crap] about being fat," Weeks said. "Actually he much prefers Adam Pally's character."

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Sometimes, the Internet gives you a gift you almost don't deserve. Such is the case with IFC's "The Spoils of Babylon." When we first heard about the project, starring Tobey Maguire and Kristen Wiig as a brother and sister who also are star-crossed lovers, we dreamed up a bunch of insane scenarios that couldn't possibly come true. Now the first trailer has arrived—and it puts our expectations to shame. We broke down this wackiness by the numbers as best we could. DANMORAN@TRIUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA

All the riches

'The Spoils of Babylon': More ridiculous than we could have imagined

1

Number of times Jessica Alba, who looks hella '60s, takes a face swim in the toilet

1:1

Ratio of "love" to "bastard"

2

Split-screen shots. One is used for a sassy phone call. The other involves HALEY JOEL OSMENT.

4

Times Maguire and Wiig are seen in the throes of passion. That is, if you call kissing on a porch swing "the throes of passion." Which we totally do.

10

Shots fired. This is a series of much revenge, people.

10

Number of wigs Maguire goes through in the trailer alone. He also rocks this supple goatee

THE DIGIT

$1.85 MILLION

That's how much Hugh Jackman raised for the Motion Picture & Television Fund during his 45th birthday fundraiser, eonline.com reports. Tom Cruise, Olivia Munn, Terrence Howard, Kristin Davis, Darren Criss and Maria Bello all were in attendance.

THE QUOTE
"I WAS LIKE, 'NEXT TIME I GO TO THAT DANCE, I'M GONNA KNOW EVERY WORD. AND I'M GOING TO MAKE SURE HE SEES ME LIP-SYNCING IT, AND I'M GONNA CATCH HIS EYE, AND I'M GONNA SAY THE WORDS. AND HE'S GONNA LIKE ME.' "

—Sandra Bullock, on the U.K.'s "Jonathan Ross Show," on why she can rap every word to Sugarhill Gang's "Rapper's Delight." Her high-school plan totally worked.

A 'Grand' adventure

Are we the only ones who hadn't heard of Wes Anderson's next flick? The "Moonrise Kingdom" director revealed the poster for his next flick, "The Grand Budapest Hotel," on Monday. The movie, starring Ralph Fiennes, Bill Murray, Edward Norton, Owen Wilson, Tilda Swinton, Jude Law, Adrien Brody, Harvey Keitel, Jason Schwartzman, Willem Dafoe, Jeff Goldblum and Saoirse Ronan, is set for an Oct. 17, 2014, release. And that hotel is, indeed, grand.

'Jurassic' girl?

OK, OK, we're beginning to warm to this "Jurassic World" thing more and more. Deadline.com reports that "New Girl" star Jake Johnson may be signing on to the flick. In our minds, this can only lead to a "Jurassic"-themed "New Girl" episode, which would probably be the greatest gift television has ever given us.

Wedding special

Sean Lowe and Catherine Giudici have set a date. The "Bachelor" couple will tie the knot Jan. 26 in front of TV cameras, Us Weekly reports, for a live airing on ABC.

Giudici plans to have 12 bridesmaids, one of them being Lesley Murphy, a former "Bachelor" contestant who also vied for Lowe's hand.

THE DIGIT
16.1 MILLION
Ratings for Sunday's Season 4 premiere of "The Walking Dead," the most-watched episode in the series' history, according to AMC. That's also nearly 6 million people more than watched the final episode of "Breaking Bad."
